Publications

Books

Documenting the Undocumented: Latina/o Narrative and Social Justice in the Era of Operation Gatekeeper. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2016; paperback 2017.
University Press of Florida, This book examines narratives representing undocumented Latin American immigrants in recent texts (1990 to present) by US Latino/a writers. It asks the questions: How are recent Latino/a narratives in the US intervening in immigration debates, which pivot around our understandings of the "American nation"? How might these narratives shift, reconceive, or reinforce, the terms of the debate? I examine texts that are traditionally considered "literary" (novels and autobiography) as well as forms of writing that often are viewed as outside of literary activity: journalism, ethnography, oral histories, and even letters home. Supported by a KU Hall Center for the Humanities Research Fellowship for Fall 2008 semester and by a Smithsonian Institution Research Fellowship for 2009-2010.
